SILENT AND DIGNIFIED: Victims of British army violence march along the Grosvenor Road to the city centre to protest at yesterday's RIR parade

LOYALISTS ATTACK VICTIMS' PROTEST

Republicans protest peacefully against RIR

RELATIVES of victims of British army violence were attacked by loyalist thugs at yesterday's 'homecoming' parade through the city centre.

Fireworks and missiles were thrown at nationalist marchers as they demonstrated against the British army march at Fisherwick Place.

Counter-parades

Thousands of loyalists had gathered in the city centre to cheer on British troops returning from Iraq and Afghanistan.

Republicans organised counter-parades against the military march, involving relatives of people murdered by the British army.

When the Sinn Féin-organised demonstration reached Fisherwick Place, near the Grand Opera House, it was attacked by loyalists.
